Your journey, secured.

Click Thinking Newsletter

Overseeing your company's Security Awareness efforts is a significant responsibility that's not without its challenges. We're pleased to provide the following insights to help make the job a little easier.

Sign Up for the Next Benchmarking Campaign

Want to know how your company stacks up when it comes to security awareness? Participate in our upcoming benchmarking campaign that launches in October. It's free to all Barracuda PhishLine clients. To sign up, contact support or your consultant.

Evolving Content for a World Market

To meet the growing demand for training in markets across the globe, we offer a variety of modules in multiple languages. Support can provide you with the growing list of available topics.

In addition, the Barracuda PhishLine content center includes dozens of translated phishing emails and landing pages to support worldwide training. Soon, additional content that has been vetted and reviewed for authenticity by individuals in market will be added to the collection.

It's all part of a larger initiative to match content with the needs of a diverse and growing clientele. Watch for updates as we continue this important initiative.

Small Changes—Better Experience

If you've visited your instance lately, you may have noticed some updates, like a streamlined log-in page and more analytics around email usage. We hope these enhancements help you make the most of your training efforts. More improvements are on the way.

Let's Play a Game

Cybercrime doesn't pay but employees can learn from it by playing our Click Thinking games, 'Who's In?' and 'It's Here, It's There, It's Ransomware'. These choose-your-own-adventure styled games let players assume the role of a cybercriminal and create their own pathways to success—or failure. With dozens of different scenarios for each game, there's always a reason to play again. If you're looking for innovative ways to keep employees engaged, these games are just what you're looking for.
